UNITED TO PROTECT QUEBEC'S BOREAL GEM – THE BROADBACK FOREST

THE PIECES ARE COMING TOGETHER

The Broadback Forest, in the heart of Cree Nation traditional territory in northern Québec, is one of the last large, intact wilderness areas in the Boreal forest. It is home to a rich diversity of species including threatened woodland caribou. The protection of more than 10 000km² of the Broadback Forest, proposed by First Nations governments, has garnered the support of scientists, environmental groups, forest product customers, authors and logging companies.

Conserving this irreplaceable legacy is a unique opportunity. Will the Quebec government act now to legislate its protection by spring 2014?
